GREAT FOR COMFORT

Held Monsun Rainsuit £100

www.held.de

The most expensive suit here and it shows. It goes on effortlessly, there are lengthy flare zips to get over the boot, and a perfect amount of stretch in the material to easily get it over your shoulders. For anyone struggling with movement, this is the one to get. The cuffs have an inner and outer, for a perfect seal around the glove. The suit also has a pocket inside the storm flap, good reflective panels, and it feels like it's built to last.

Richa Typhoon Rain Overall £39.99

www.nevis.uk.com

Short in the leg but otherwise easy to get on, comfortable, with plenty of room to stretch. The collar is snug, while elastic and Velcro-strapped cuffs squeeze over a glove easily. The integrated storage bag - stowing away on the left breast - is somewhat bulky, with a strap designed so you can carry the bundle around your waist. Other than that, this a great-value suit, especially given its perfect performance in the waterproof test.

GREAT FOR BEST-VALUE PROTECTION

Oxford Rain Seal Suit £39.99

www.oxprod.com

This half-lined Oxford suit is not only baggy in all the wrong places, but also tight in all the wrong places too. Around the front of the crotch and belly there's a lot of sag, while in the shoulders, buttock and trouser bottoms there's a tightness that makes the suit liable to splitting. After Oxford's excellent two-piece set these are disappointing.

Buffalo Mistral Suit £44.99

www.thekeycollection.co.uk

A poor suit. The mesh in the upper part of the body gets tangled and caught up on the Velcro, making the arms difficult to get in. There's not enough flare on the trousers either, with some of the material ripping the first time we put it on. The suit also allowed water ingress in our testing too. For this money, there are better suits out there.

Tuzo Waterproof Suit £39.99

www.mandp.co.uk

This Tuzo one-piece is an unlined suit, which folds up into a handy integral storage pouch located on the back. However it proved annoyingly tricky to get on, due to a mesh liner throughout that made getting a boot through the leg difficult. With the poor score in our waterproof tests, this suit is probably one that's best avoided.
